

imports being dumped from Canada, because of the overall depressed economy in many parts of Asia and Europe, and particularly in the South, in addition to low prices on the crops, we have no crops.

So the question is now not the extent of the problem. We know that. The question is now, What do we do?

I just think it is interesting. When we have a hurricane, tornado, or earthquake, there is always a rush to provide economic assistance. There is always on the nightly news when someone is visiting a hurricane-ravaged area or area that has been hurt by a tornado, a reaching out to the people. When you have the earthquake, it is the same result. Somehow it seems like it is different with the farmers because I think it is so gradual. If you have an earthquake, it happens, it is over, the people come in, they leave, and they have made an expression of their concern. But when it is an economic disaster over a longer period of time, it is harder to have people focus on the severity of the problem.

I think that is what is true in the agricultural disaster that we are now experiencing in my State. But the loss is just as severe, the hurt is just as severe. When you have to sell the family farm and move, and you can't pay your bills, you are hurting just as much as someone who has lost a family home because of a tornado, earthquake, or hurricane, or some other natural disaster.

The question now is, What do we do? It is clear, in my opinion, that the current agricultural programs that are designed to address assistance are too bureaucratic.

They do not work. They are outdated. They need something else to be helpful. What I mean by that is, for instance, with the loan program, emergency loans, the Government tells a farmer, well, you have to get turned down by three lending institutions in your local area and then you can come to the Government and get some financial assistance in terms of a Federal loan. If you could get the local loan, you would not need the Federal loan. But somehow you have to show that you could not get the local loan, but that if you get the Federal loan you can pay it back. If you could pay back the Federal loan, you could have paid back the local loan and you would not have had any need for help at the Federal level in the first place.

Those programs, well intended as they are, are simply too bureaucratic and do not work in providing real assistance to millions of American farmers.

What we are working on is to try to present a package, and this should be bipartisan. Republicans did not cause the problem and Democrats did not cause the problem, but the truth is we are going to have to work together to solve the problem. If we do not work together, chances are it is not going to get solved. This is not a political problem; it is a natural disaster problem. So what we are trying to do is provide some assistance.

Some have suggested increasing the loan levels, the artificial target prices, removing the caps on those programs to allow for a higher loan rate in order to give more assistance to farmers. That is a good thing to do. But in my area, it does not really help because my farmers don't have a crop to put in the Federal loan program. So in the South where you have no crop, we support what we are trying to do for our northern farmers. It is very important and I think it is the right thing to do. But in the southern portion of the United States where there is no crop at all and they have not been able to benefit from the program, we are suggesting direct financial assistance. It would go to farmers who do not have their losses covered by any other type of program. If someone has crop insurance, well, they may be helped a little bit. And the amount of help they get under the Crop Insurance Program should not allow them to double dip, but crop insurance is not going to cover their entire losses. So that part of their loss which is not covered by some insurance program should be clearly eligible for direct financial assistance. And for many of our farmers, they can't even afford crop insurance and so they have nothing. So their losses should be also covered, obviously, by any type of direct financial assistance to try to help them survive.

It is strictly a question of this one-time aid to help them survive until the next year so they can still be around to plant and grow the crops that help feed most, if not all, of America and much of the rest of the world.

Some will say, well, Senator, this is going to be expensive. Where is it going to come from? Well, No. 1, because of the good economic conditions, I think because of many of the things we have been able to do in the Congress, fortunately, the economy of the country is good in other areas, and, fortunately, we do not have a Federal deficit which we used to have—we now have a Federal surplus and we have had estimates of $50-, $60-, $75 billion just in this year—why not look at this disaster as an emergency, and if you have a surplus in the Federal budget, let's consider using that surplus to address a real economic disaster which has huge consequences if we do not do something to help out family farms.

Some say, well, we should use the surplus for a tax cut. There is certainly room for a tax cut. I think if it is the right type of tax cut and is helpful to the people who need help, we should move in that direction. Should we use it for saving Social Security? Yes. Certainly, that is a higher priority. But should we also use some of it to help save family farms that are facing an economic disaster beyond their control? They had absolutely nothing to do with it. The answer is yes.

This is what Government is all about, trying to help those who are in need and creating an economic climate whereby through hard work and industrial spirit they can produce and be profitable. If something happens not related to anything they have done that causes an economic disaster, I think we in Government have an obligation to participate in finding some solution to that problem. That is why, hopefully, in the coming week we will be able to join forces, Republicans and Democrats, and say, look, no one here caused the problem but, by golly, we had better work together in order to solve it; otherwise, we will not have done our duty. I certainly want to participate in that effort and plan to be very actively involved.

Just this week we had a very good meeting with the Secretary of Agriculture, Dan Glickman. The Secretary understands the nature of the problem. He understands the severity of it. He also understands that many of the programs we have on the books simply are not enough to address the problems that we are experiencing this year, and he has pledged his cooperation to try to come up with something that can provide the type of direct financial assistance that is certainly needed in my State of Louisiana. I look forward to accomplishing that in the coming weeks.

Mr. President, that concludes my remarks.

I yield the floor.
